Refresher Course on Research Management

The organizational structure and functional role of India's agricultural research system has evolved over a period of time to match the emerging demands. The goals and objectives of agricultural research are being broadened from primarily food production to sustainable resource management, equity, gender, health and environmental concerns. These are being guided not only by the compulsion of improving food and nutritional security, but also by the concerns of environmental protection, sustainability, profitability and protection of Intellectual Property. The partnership research with stakeholders viz. private sector and farmers, sharing of expertise and experiences with inter institutional linkages, resource management etc. are being recognized as the key factors in augmenting the agricultural productivity in the country. In fact, the future demands in agriculture will lead to increased complexities of research and would, therefore, call for more and more collaborative, approach. Our research pursuits must have innovation in approach, collaboration in action, accountability in decision making and responsibility to all the stakeholders. This Refresher Course on Research Management has been designed in such a way that it address issues linked with the emerging challenges to agricultural research.

Objectives

- To acquaint the participants with emerging scenario of agricultural research
- To refresh them on the basic concepts of agricultural research
- To give the participants practice of writing various components of a research proposal
- To enable them apply project management techniques in research programme planning
